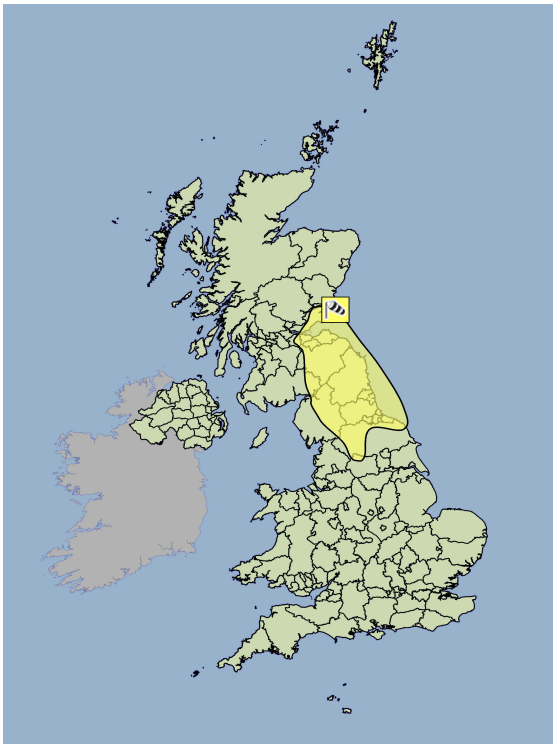
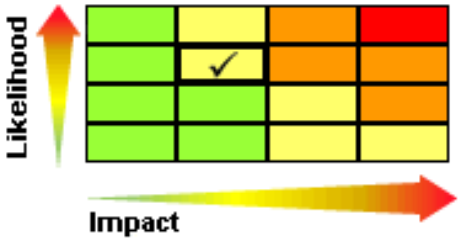
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
Another area of low pressure is expected to move east close to the north of Scotland during Monday, bringing an increase in the winds to many northern parts of the UK during Monday morning. The most likely area for localised minor impacts from the strong and gusty winds is over and to the east of high ground in southern Scotland and northern England during the morning, coinciding with the rush hour in some places. After a lull during the afternoon, further strong and gusty southwesterly winds will return to similar areas later on Monday evening. This aspect will be kept under review with regard to the requirement for any further warnings.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Wind

Valid from 05:00 on Mon, 09th Nov 2015 until 13:00 on Mon, 09th Nov 2015

The southwesterly wind is expected to become strong during Monday morning, with gales and locally severe gales over high ground, but also some very gusty winds to the east of high ground as well. Gusts of 50-60 mph are likely with a risk of isolated gusts of 65-70 mph in exposed areas of southeast Scotland and the far north of England.

The public should be aware of the risk of localised disruption to travel.
